World's Most Romantic Off the Beaten Path Cities

There are countless romantic cities in the world, but so many are looked over in favor of the biggest and most touristic of them all, such as Paris, Venice, or Madrid. However, there are plenty of lovely off the beaten path cities you can visit on your next couple's vacation that will allow you to escape the crowds of tourists and focus on your fun trip and, of course, each other.

Almeria

Almeria is a fairy tale city located in the southern Andalusian region of Spain. The city is an echo of its Moorish past, lending it an otherworldly feel. The Alcabaza, the old Moorish fortress, is a must-visit while you are there, as are the Castillo de San Cristobal and the soaring Cathedral of Almeria. Make sure to stroll and window-shop along Las Ramblas, a series of routes connecting the main parts of the city. Take a taxi to city's crystalline beaches and walk through Calle de Coches at sunset (or sunrise) to admire how the water is lit on fire by the setting sun. And don't forget to pick up fresh food at the open-air markets or grab a cocktail and some tapas in one of the many lively bars.

Warsaw

Warsaw is the capital of Poland and is often overlooked because it doesn't seem all too romantic at first glance. But once you get past that first impression, you'll find that any couple's trip to Warsaw can be incredibly romantic. There is quite a bit of gorgeous and unique architecture to seek out, such as the Wilanow Palace and the quaint buildings of the Old Town neighborhood. The Old Town is also the perfect place to grab a coffee during the day or indulge in an intimate dinner for two. In the middle of the city is the large, lush Łazienki Królewskie Park, a welcome respite from the chaos in the heart of Warsaw and a great place for a picnic for two.
